Program

Playing games and being active has an incredible capacity to increase engagement. The question always is how much deep learning is actual taking place from such activities? This is where framing and debriefing play an essential role. Effective activity framing helps guide the students towards the learning objectives and purposeful debriefing can help students extract and reflect on the learning that took place. In this second follow-up workshop we will examine ways to use framing and debriefing to help students expand their understanding and connection with the various social emotional learning constructs we have discussed in previous workshops.

This learning opportunity is being offered through a grant from Alberta Education.
